The Discovery is a four-berth motorhome built on Fiat cab/chassis with the 2.3 litre motor driving the front wheels through Fiat's six-speed AMT auto gearbox.

The internal layout has the dinette opposite the entry with the cab to the left. Above the dinette is a dropdown bed. To the right, the kitchen and then the ablutions department with the double bed in the rear corner, driver's side. It is an efficient layout that provides comfortable sleeping and dining for four people in what is – at 6.99 metres – a relatively short motorhome.

Entertainment space is restricted to the dinette, as the cab seats do not rotate to create a forward lounge area. However, by way of compensation the dinette seats are comfortably plump and a pleasure to sit upon.

Following current fashion trends, the cabinetry surfaces are timber grained laminate, a mixture of milk and dark chocolate in colour with a gloss ivory finish on the cabinet doors – all against a backdrop of white walls and ceilings. Having internal height of 1990mm gives the Discovery spacious feeling of freedom. It also allows room for the dropdown bed to be stowed away when not in use while allowing sufficient headroom below for regular activities.

Lowering and raising the bed is simple. First turn on the control panel key then raise/ lower the bed by pressing the appropriate up/down button. There are aluminium guides at each corner of the bed that hold it firmly in place and the bed is raised/lowered using seat belt style straps. It's a robust affair that allows a total occupant weight of 250kg.

There is sufficient room overhead to allow the bed to remain 'made-up' in the raised position. The access ladder attaches at the kitchen end but if you are nimble you can climb in and out from the cab seats. At 1920mm long by 1400mm wide it is 80mm wider than the French bed at
